

Create an artwork that tells the story of what is important to you

[illegible]

This is a silhouette of a girl drawn onto white paper to start with. To get your silhouette you could use the outline of a photograph, or ask someone to draw around the edge of your shadow against a wall. Then fill the shape with drawings of all sorts of things that interest you or are important to you – this example shows pizza, a puppy and playing tennis! Then cut around the edge of your drawing and stick it onto black card for real impact.

This girl has used a photograph of herself printed out in black and white, and stuck it into the lower corner of the paper. She has then drawn a huge thought bubble that illustrates all the things that she thinks about and is interested in. By making the figure black and white and the thought bubble colour, the illustrations really stand out. What can you see in it?

This is a full-face portrait where half the face is a photograph and the other is a mirror-image sketch (though actually, faces are not symmetrical!) The person's hobbies and interests are then drawn all around, but, of course, you could collage like the picture above or do a mix of the two.
